

scoopfolk

A little daily thing.

A bright identity for an everyday fiber routine.

THE BRAND IN ONE SENTENCE

Make room for the everyday.

Scoopfolk is a daily fiber brand for people who want a practical routine they can make their own.

The name connects a familiar action with a friendly human word. The identity gives a countertop staple enough character to be noticed, and enough clarity to be understood.

Who it is for

Adults who have tried fiber and want a different everyday experience. Keep the brand inclusive; the research does not support a narrow demographic.

How it should feel

Bright and welcoming. Plainspoken about the product. Playful in the visual details.

Positioning direction. Finished formula, product experience, price and audience response remain in development.

A name with room to breathe.

scoopfolk

Original geometric lettering

Rounded terminals and open counters give the name a warm, direct character. The repeated bowls connect visually to the scoop.

Use the supplied master

The logo is drawn as vector geometry. It is not a font. Keep the letter shapes and spacing together; do not retype the name to recreate it.

THE MEASURING SCOOP

A small sign of the routine.

The symbol comes from the physical product action. Its open bowl and tilted handle echo the rounded wordmark.

Use it for social avatars, favicons, packing details and simple patterns. Use the full wordmark wherever the brand is being introduced.

DAILY FIBER

Category lockup

Keep “Daily Fiber” separate and legible.
The descriptor clarifies the product category.

Protect the shape.

Clear space: at least one lowercase o counter height around the visible mark. In the master artwork, x = 46 units.

Minimum size: wordmark 140 px / 35 mm wide; symbol 24 px / 6 mm. Category lockup 220 px / 55 mm. At favicon sizes, use only the symbol and inspect the raster.

Choose contrast

Plum on cream or lilac. Cream on purple or plum. Plum on pink. One-color black or white where production requires it.

Keep it intact

No stretching, rotation, outlines, gradients inside the logo, added shadows or rearranged letters. Do not use the mark over a busy photograph.

Use masters for production

Generated packaging imagery is a visual reference. Place the supplied SVG master in final artwork rather than tracing lettering from a mockup.

Color does the talking.

Space to breathe

Start with cream and plum for reading. Use pink for a bold brand moment, purple for contrast, and lilac for quieter surfaces.

Suggested balance: 45% cream, 20% pink, 15% purple, 10% lilac, 10% plum. This is a composition guide, not a fixed quota.

Latest reference leads

This V1 develops the pink/purple storefront reference. It replaces the earlier orange direction for this design proposal.

HEX values are the digital source of truth. Approve physical proofs on the chosen stock; no spot-color or CMYK match is specified yet.

Body, labels, instructions and interface copy.

Digital type scale

Hero	64–88 px / 1.0
Section title	40–48 px / 1.1
Body	18 px / 1.5
Labels	14 px / 1.35

Measured contrast

Plum on cream	15.94:1	Body text
Plum on lilac	12.67:1	Body text
Cream on purple	5.53:1	Body text
Plum on pink	4.67:1	Body text
Cream on pink	3.41:1	Large text only

Normal text target: 4.5:1. Large text: 3:1. Cream on pink is reserved for large lettering or decorative brand marks, not small labels. Font files are not bundled; use an appropriate license for deployment.

Simple shapes. Confident scale.

Use the scoop as the motif

Repeat the supplied symbol on mailers, tissue and back panels. Keep a consistent scale and enough room between marks. A pattern should never sit behind product information.

Build on an 8 px grid

Use 24 px card corners, pill-shaped buttons and generous 48–64 px section spacing. Align to a clear left edge. Let one element dominate each composition.

Photography

Soft daylight, matte materials and honest product scale. Cream or lilac surfaces. Keep props useful: a scoop, a tub, a familiar setting. Avoid clinical theater and body-transformation imagery.

Made for the counter.

AI-generated design visualization. Tub sizes, refill availability, materials and label content are illustrative. This is not a manufacturing dieline or a sale-ready label.

Use cream for the reading surface and plum for text. Pink creates emphasis; purple can anchor product imagery or secondary sections.

Keep ingredients, directions and purchase terms easy to find. This page demonstrates the identity; it is not a functioning storefront.

PROPOSED BRAND LINE

A little daily thing.

Write like someone explaining a useful product across the kitchen counter.

Be concrete

Say what the product is, what is in it, and how to use it once those details are confirmed. Keep the category descriptor close to the logo.

Be warm

Use ordinary language and short sentences. Light humor belongs in the margins. Treat digestive discomfort with respect.

Earn confidence

Let the actual label, product demonstration and purchase terms carry the argument. Avoid results that the product has not demonstrated.

USE

“Meet Scoopfolk.”
“What’s in the tub?”
“A little daily thing.”

AVOID

“Reset your gut.”
“Never feel bloated again.”
“Clinically proven formula.”

Ready for the next build.

Inside the identity kit

- Six-color SVG and transparent PNG wordmarks.
- Six-color SVG and transparent PNG scoop symbols.
- Social avatar and Daily Fiber lockup.
- HTML and PDF brandbook.
- Color and interface tokens in CSS and JSON.
- Packaging concept, contact sheet and source scripts.

Use the vector masters for final layouts. PNGs support quick previews and tools that do not accept SVG.

Design status

Scoopfolk is the selected name. This document is the first complete visual identity proposal. The pink/purple system follows the latest supplied reference.

Before production

Confirm the formula and label details, packaging dimensions, print proofs and font deployment. Trademark, domain and social-handle checks remain open.

Source foundation: the six Colorful Daily Fiber research files, naming record and supplied storefront reference. No competitor artwork is included in the logo system.

The word "scoopfolk" is written in a white, lowercase, sans-serif font. It is centered within a dark purple rounded rectangular background.
